- What is a defined contribution? How will it help my business?
 - Employers provide employees with a health insurance allowance, or "contribution," to spend on their healthcare. It's a win-win because employees get to choose the plan that fits their needs. And employers get to control their annual costs.
 - How could ChamberCHOICE work for you? Here's an example:
 - ABC Company wants to keep employee health insurance, but heavy rate increases make it increasingly unaffordable, and costs are difficult to predict. The company has raised its deductible twice in three years and changed carriers once.
 - Thankfully, ChamberCHOICE offers a solution to meet the needs of the company and its staff. Through careful analysis, officials determine ABC Company can afford $300 per employee per month toward health insurance. The company picks one of the three dental/vision plan offerings, and then employees may opt in to dental/vision coverage or go with a medical plan only.
 - An employee has the choice of five medical plans. With ChamberCHOICE, employees have the freedom to choose based on his/her own budget and health coverage needs. Employees pay only the difference, if any, between the plan's monthly premium and the employer's $300 contribution.
